Generally, a person is an independent contractor if the person for whom the services are performed has the right to control or direct only the result of the work and not the means and methods of accomplishing the result. If an employee-employer relationship exists, it does not matter what it is called or how the payments are measured or paid. A person cannot receive a W-2 and a Form 1099 Miscellaneous from the same employer in the same year as a general rule.

Personal Service/Consultant Contracts (excluding Training for Existing Business and Industry):

1. Formal contracts/agreements are required for all consultant arrangements in which (a) there is an exchange of monies between the College and the contractor (expenditure and revenue); or (b) the College provides consideration other than money (the services of faculty and/or students, use of campus facility, etc.).
